

I am writing to ask that you withdraw the FCC petition against the Indiana Telephone Privacy program immediately. It's simply an intrusion for businesses to call at random whenever they feel like it. If someone wants a service they will seek it out, we don't need all of the solicitations, the mail is bad enough. Furthermore, if the financial institutions need to call someone they should already have their contact information and already have some sort of arrangement made that makes it reasonable for them to call, if not, then their call is most likely unwarranted and unwanted. Additionally, the financial institutions should be monitored more closely in their dealings with their own customers - most use overseas services to make their call or automated services - my home loan is with Fifth Third Bank and I received a call on a Sunday from someone in Manila about my house payment that wasn't even late!! That's pathetic. The Attorney General in Indiana is doing a good thing and I think that's obvious by the number of people signed to have such calls restricted. Thank you.
